Why is there beauty?

Augustine
(354-430)

Why is there beauty?

Physical beauty . . . can be appreciated only by the mind. This would be impossible, if this 'idea' of beauty were not found in the mind in a more perfect form . . . But even here, if this 'idea' of beauty were not subject to change, one person would not be a better judge of sensible beauty than another . . . This consideration has readily persuaded men of ability and learning . . . that the original 'idea' is not to be found in this sphere, where it is shown to be subject to change . . .

Augustine
(354-430)

Why is there beauty?

Augustine
(354-430)

Why is there beauty?

And so they saw that there must be some being in which the original form [of beauty] resides, unchangeable, and therefore incomparable. And they rightly believed that it is there that the origin of things is to be found, in the uncreated, which is the source of all creation.

A scenic landscape photograph of a calm lake at sunset. The sky is filled with dramatic, colorful clouds in shades of orange, yellow, and blue. The sun is low on the horizon, casting a warm glow over the scene. In the background, there are snow-capped mountains and a dense forest of evergreen trees. The lake's surface is still, reflecting the vibrant colors of the sky and the silhouettes of the trees. On the right side, there are some bushes with autumn-colored leaves. The overall mood is peaceful and majestic.

Beauty is no quality in things themselves: It exists merely in the mind which contemplates them; and each mind perceives a different beauty. One person may even perceive deformity, where another is sensible of beauty; and every individual ought to acquiesce in his own sentiment, without pretending to regulate those of others
